

UNDERWOOD

Aaron Smith's ability to quickly create and execute an effective plan of action means even the most unexpected problems will be met with rapid and high-quality service.

Aaron Smith's post-graduate degrees in theology and business administration help him to navigate complex litigation issues by considering what should be done, and what can practically be done. His teaching experience at public and private schools, churches, and legal programs allows him to offer clients strong and effective communication and top-notch written and oral advocacy.

He previously served as the Chief Law Clerk to United States Judge Matthew Kacsmaryk, Northern District of Texas, Amarillo Division where he worked on both civil and criminal trials, as well as national-profile cases. Working inside the court system with some of the country's sharpest legal minds gave him insight into the experiential considerations of the federal district court system.
